THE SENTENCING OF MARGARET 'GERI' MURPHY

'Disturbed'

Ex-social services worker gets five years;
attorney to see shock probation in 30 days

By Ben Carlson
News staff

The former social services worker who pleaded guilty to nine felony counts of falsifying child welfare investigations was sentenced to five years in prison Tuesday in Anderson Circuit Court.

Margaret "Geri" Murphy, 61, heard her fate, was taken into custody, shackled and placed among other inmates as families affected by her actions looked on in delight.

In announcing her sentence, Circuit Judge Charles Hickman rejected Murphy's attorney's pleas for probation, calling any notion that no one was actually harmed by her actions "disingenuous."

"The court is disturbed by the actions, or non-actions, taken in these situations," Hickman said.

"The children left in these situations were possibly physically or sexually abused, and that could have been prevented."

"The fact that children could be left in the hands of abusers is particularly concerning to this court. Probation is denied."

Murphy, who had only appeared in court twice since being charged, hid her face from cameras as she approached the bench and did not speak while standing before Hickman.

Before Murphy was sentenced, her attorney,

Woman says family court judge should be indicted

From staff reports

As Margaret "Geri" Murphy was being sentenced to five years in prison Tuesday morning, a woman outside of the Anderson County Courthouse carried a sign lobbying for the indictment of a family court judge she says was complicit in Murphy's crimes.

Taylorsville resident Deborah Klotz, who failed to perform a citizen's arrest on Family Court Judge John David Myles on July 2, carried a large cardboard sign that said "Indict Myles for Complicity," drawing attention from area media and curious looks from passersby.

She said her goal was to help Anderson, Spencer and Shelby counties' families from being allegedly hurt by Judge Myles, including families involved in the Murphy case.

"I plan on doing this continuously until I see him out of office," she said when asked how long she plans to protest against the judge.

Library board: lowered tax rate a 'goodwill gesture'

Rate to decrease 2.3 percent

By Meaghan Downs

Homeowners can shave a few dollars off their property tax bill next year, at least when it comes to Anderson Public Library's tax rate.

The library board of trustees voted 3-2 at its July 24 meeting to lower both its real property and tangible personal property tax rates for the upcoming fiscal year.

The board lowered its tax rate from 88 to 86 cents per $1,000 assessed value, a 2.3 percent decrease.

The board also lowered its tangible personal property tax rate from $12.68 to $8.80 per $1,000 assessed value, a 30.6 percent decrease.

Pam Mullins, Anderson Public Library's director, said the library received slightly more revenue than projected for real property tax revenue for 2012, and about 40 percent less revenue for personal property.

The decrease in tangible personal property tax was "an anomaly," Mullins said, adding that the discrepancy may be because of property re-assessments that lowered values.

According to a report in The Anderson News last July, many taxing districts in the city and county received surplus revenue because of an increase in distilled spirits inventory from Wild Turkey, with the library receiving $42,190 in unan-

Rising Sons Winery opens home farm to community for first time

By Meaghan Downs

Grape stomping is in Joe Sloan's blood. His Italian grandfather taught him how, and Joe kept the tradition alive, passing down his knowledge to his three sons.

"We've done the 'Lucille Ball' thing, get in there and smash them up with your feet," Joe said.

The art of wine making stayed in the family as well, with the Sloan family opening its Rising Sons Home Farm and Winery to the public for the first time this summer.

Want to go?

Rising Home Farm and Winery is open Friday and Saturday from 12-6 p.m. and Sunday from 1-5 p.m., or Tuesday through Thursday by appointment. Rising Sons is located at 975 Frankfort Road on US 127 business, just 1/2 mile from McDonald's on US 127 bypass. For more information, contact the winery at 502-600-0224 or find it on Facebook at Rising Sons Home Farm and Winery.

Grape stomping, however, isn't how the Sloan family harvests the juice needed for winery's eight varieties of wine.

Every grape of the Sloans' 10-acres of vines is handpicked, Joe said, pressed, bottled and aged in a barn on site.

The red wines age for about two years, depending on the grape variety, he said. The farm has had their 2009 bottles aging in oak for about 2 1/2 years.

If making wine taught Joe one thing, he said, it's patience. "Raising grapes is a very labor-intensive process," he said. "I did not realize from the onset how much is involved. They become a part of you." For Joe's wife and Rising Sons co-owner Francine, the picking is her favorite part of the process.

Compared to the 27 years she spent teaching in Anderson County, tending the vineyards is definitely less stressful.

"I've always enjoyed the picking part, getting your hands on the pods of the grapes," she said.

The Sloans planted their first grapevines about 12 years ago, at a time traditional crops like tobacco moved aside for other forms of sustainable farming and agritourism, Joe said.

To Joe, who previously raised cattle on his land, it made sense.

"What people had forgotten was that before prohibition, Kentucky was the biggest grape-growing state in the nation," he said.

The Sloans consulted other wineries, including former Lovers Leap winery owner Jerry Holder, as well as the University of Kentucky Department of Agriculture and Anderson County Extension agent Tommy Yankey. "He's a wealth of knowledge," Joe said of Yankey.

Unlike other crops, drought did not hurt the Sloans' grapes; actually, it may have helped the fruit.

"Grapes will typically do better in a hot, dryer environment," Joe said. "It lends itself to a sweeter grape."

The winery offers their sweetest grape variety, the Concord, as well as six other varieties — Cabernet Franc, Vignoles, Norton, St. Vincent, Baco Noir and Cuyuga.

Their sons — Peyton, 27, Jordan, 24, and Logan, 20 — will be helping in harvesting the Cuyuga grapes from mid to late August this summer.

"They've done everything from the pruning of the grapes to picking off the grapes, they've been involved in every process of it, even when they didn't want to be,"

Joe said.

Family is important to the Sloans.

Rising Sons plans on naming a wine in the fall after Joe's grandmother Marie, who had a habit of drinking a glass of sweet wine before bed.

The Rising Sons name reflects on the part the Sloans' son play in the winery, as well as pay homage to Joe's heritage.

Family is the message (and true story Joe said) that the family tells on the back label of every bottle of wine, including one named for Joe's grandfather — Cataldo's Salute:

"I remember watching my

81-year-old grandfather, an Italian immigrant, raise his first great-grandson into the air and proudly proclaim in broken English, 'You are the sun coming up and I am the sun going down.'

"Every morning as the sun rises over our vineyard, I am reminded of that moment."

The winery is small, with no official tasting room, but a large white tent on the lawn filled with clusters of small tables overlooking the vineyard.

It's not the family's full-time business yet; Joe said he still works at an appliance store in Frankfort.

Eventually, however, the Sloans plan to put in pavilions on their property for weddings and special occasions. Joe even has an exact spot on his 45-acre farm in mind.

"With that view toward the vineyard, I just think that would be a neat picture," Joe said.

But currently, the small home farm is what people want, Joe said, it's what they're looking for.

"It's our home," he said of the winery.

"It embodies that whole concept of a home and that's the image we want to project to the community."

"We're not interested in becoming the big wine makers," Francine said. "We're interested in producing a good product, as a Kentucky product that we can be proud of."

MURPHY

Bill Patrick, said the court had every reason to probate the case, and that a pre-sentencing report reflected only Murphy's weaknesses.

That triggered prosecutor Barbara Whaley of the state's attorney general's office to ask that a witness be allowed to give testimony.

Whaley called on Amy VanHoose, who was Murphy's supervisor with the Cabinet for Health and Family Services when an investigation was launched last year.

VanHoose recounted at least two of the nine cases in which Murphy admittedly falsified documents.

When asked by prosecutor Whaley if children were left in abusive situations as a result of Murphy's actions, VanHoose said yes, adding that there is no way for the Cabinet to determine exactly how many cases Murphy falsified.

Under cross-examination, VanHoose told Patrick that cases called into question had been reinvestigated since Murphy resigned.

"So children could have been abused after that date?" Patrick asked. "The fact is, you don't know."

After the hearing, Patrick said he intends to seek shock probation for Murphy.

"We knew that incarceration was a possibility when the decision was made to enter a plea," Patrick said. "While I am disappointed with the ruling not to probate, I understand it and respect the court's decision.

"The law allows a motion for shock probation to be made after 30 days, which I fully intend to do."

Outside the courtroom, Whaley, who recommended a five-year sentence, said justice had been served.

She said if the case had gone to trial, Murphy could have received a maximum sentence of 20 years.

"I feel this sent a message that the system to protect children cannot be breached without serious consequences," Whaley said. "Of all cases child victims are the most vulnerable."

Whaley said she didn't know what Murphy's motive was in falsifying documents.

"It could have been abuse of power, but I cannot say," she said. "But we cannot allow the system to fail, and I think the judge was correct in sending that message today."

"Geri Murphy's actions were unconscionable," Attorney General Jack Conway said in a news release following her sentencing.

"Ms. Murphy had a responsibility to investigate allegations of child abuse or neglect and to take action to protect children from these heinous crimes.

"She failed to execute her duties and to protect Kentucky's youngest and most vulnerable citizens. The sentence handed down today sends a critical message that damaging the integrity of the cabinet's system of support for child victims will not be tolerated."

In at least two of the cases where Murphy falsified reports finding that sexual abuse allegations were unsubstantiated, children were victimized again due to being left in abusive situations, Conway said.

In one case involving a report of sexual abuse of an infant by the mother's boyfriend, new allegations of sexual abuse against the boyfriend were made after Murphy provided false facts and unsubstantiated the original report of abuse.

Police expressed the belief that Murphy's inaction allowed the sexual abuse to continue.

In another case, Murphy documented that children had denied being abused in a foster home, when in fact they had given authorities details of the abuse.

As a result of Murphy's falsification of the facts, the children remained in an abusive home until another complaint was filed and investigated by another social worker, which eventually led to the children being removed from the foster home, Conway said.

anticipated revenue for the last fiscal year.

The lowered tax rates will bring in about $50,000 less revenue than the $1.336 million budgeted for the upcoming fiscal year, Mullins said.

Mullins said she'd rather underestimate income and overestimate expenditures, rather than the other way around, and that the library will have the money to support the difference.

"I don't think it'll do a great deal of harm," Mullins said of dipping into the board's $2 million in reserve funds, adding that she's confident the county's collection rate will remain high.

Mullins said delinquent tax bills may also help offset drops in revenue; last year the library collected about $25,000 in delinquent tax bills.

Trustee Bryan Proctor, one of three board members including President Amy Kennedy and Secretary Katie Hutton who voted in favor of the tax rate decreases, said when he looks at the library's $2 million in reserves, he "thinks $50,000 is a drop in the bucket."

"I think I would like to see taxpayers of real property get a cut," Proctor said. "With real property you're going to affect way more people."

Kennedy agreed, and said lowering the tax rates will be a goodwill gesture toward the community to take the tax rate as low as the board could.

"Dipping $50,000 into reserves isn't going to break us," Kennedy said.

Trustee Martha McNaghten said she favored another custom tax rate calculation from the state, which would only bring in $35,000 less revenue than what the library needed.

"It doesn't decrease as much as [the 86 cents per $1,000 tax rate], but because of the future, it gives us a cushion for next year," McNaghten said. "Even though we have that cushion of reserve, I'm leery of cutting that greatly. I would like the tax cut; I would love it dearly. But I love the library, too."

Both McNaghten and trustee Jane Scott Bentley voted against the tax rate.

In a follow-up interview, Mullins said the lowered tax rates were a "win-win situation" for taxpayers and the library, which would not have to lower its quality of its services.

"It gives our taxpayers a pretty substantial break," she said of next year's tax rates. "I like that our board was arguing over who gets the bigger tax break... I was very pleased at that outcome."

Taxpayers, unemployed won't like any of this Column as I see 'em ...

If you had poured over $900,000 into home improvements since 1988, would you even consider selling it today for $75 grand?
Granted, the old Early Childhood Center isn't a home, per se, but that's about how much money taxpayers have dumped into it over the past 24 years.
Not a very good investment, considering that earlier this month the building — along with 7.5 acres of land — fetched about 12 percent of the amount spent to fix it up, according to the district's own depreciation schedule.
If you've been paying attention since the school board voted to sell that building earlier this month, you already know that the building appraised for $170,000, and that its most recent assessment was $3 million.

Ben Carlson
Publisher

What you didn't know is that the school district apparently still owes bond money on the building. How much is a mysterious mystery that is trying to be decoded by the financial staff. If and when I get an answer on that, I'll fill you in.
Here are some other interesting tidbits I've uncovered since last we spoke:
· The building's value, after being depreciated from $1.1 million, remains at $551,197.
· The 7.5 acres of land on which it sits was purchased in 1929 for nearly $11,000.
· A $182,918 bond was let in 2004 for what the scheduled says was an "addition to RTC [Regional Training Center]."
· A $14,346 bond was let in 2004 to replace the roof.
· A $19,200 bond was let in 2003 for parking lot improvements.
· A $706,197 bond for the building was let in 1988.
Just in terms of cash since 1988, those bonds total nearly $923,000 on a building that just sold for $75,100.
I'm guessing the taxpayers who paid, and are likely still paying, for at least some of that bond money aren't going to like that very much.

Speaking of getting paid, here's something for those of you who aren't.
A report I found online reveals that state funds designated for economic development loans have instead been used for other, less job-producing purposes.
In the report, the Capital Planning Advisory Board lobbies for $20 million in state funds to replace money used to, among other things, balance the state budget.
I'm guessing that those who don't have a job aren't going to like that very much, either.

Those scrambling for a seat on the anti-gun bandwagon based on last week's murders in a Colorado movie theater should read the following before willingly sacrificing yet another constitutional right.
About five years ago a Lawrenceburg man was convicted after shooting a friend in anger, at point-blank range, following a heated argument.
There was nothing ambiguous about the killing, nor were there conflicting accounts of what actually happened. He simply went inside, grabbed a firearm and gunned down his friend.
One would think that such an act with a firearm would result in a murder charge and several decades (or more) in prison.
Instead, this man received a 10-year sentence for second-degree manslaughter, served only four and was back on the streets of Lawrenceburg at the beginning of this year.
More recently, a local man called the police claiming someone broke into his house, shot him and made off with his rent money.
The police showed up and quickly determined that the man wasn't robbed. Instead he shot himself in the leg in a remarkably painful attempt to avoid paying rent.
He was later charged with making false statements, etc., to police, a charge that has languished for what seems like years in court.
As different as these two instances are there is one common thread: in neither were the suspects charged, let alone prosecuted, for the illegal use of a firearm.
For all I know, or care, there are probably legal reasons and sentencing guidelines and a thousand other legitimate excuses why they weren't, and frankly I don't give a hoot.
Before I listen to any more discussion about the government ripping away my right to keep and bear, I'd much prefer to see prosecutors urge legislators to rewrite the laws in a fashion that allows them to make using a firearm improperly a crime that no one — not even those desperate to avoid paying rent or ginned up and angry at a friend — dares to break.
Once they're out of lame excuses, I'd then like to see prosecutors actually go after those who misuse firearms and stop using gun-related charges as plea bargaining chips.

Speaking of lame excuses, that's just what a so-called investigative reporter from ABC News proved to be last Friday after the Colorado shootings.
Brian Ross actually came on the air and attempted to link the suspected shooter with the Tea Party based on finding someone with the same name on a website.
What did you do, Brian, Google it?
He admitted that he wasn't sure if it was the same guy, but brought it up anyway.
That's incredibly bad journalism from what is supposed to be a top-flight news organization. Not even a small-time journalist like me would pull such a stunt.
And ABC, etc., wonder why their ratings are in the toilet.

Don't let drought run food funds dry

Thank the Lord, we received rain.
Mother Nature sure can be fickle.
I am always amazed a what a difference just a few miles makes when it come to rain. I may get a lot here on the farm and folks in town get barely a drop. It works the other way, too. It's especially tough when I'm at work and watching the rain pour off the roof of the library in buckets, only to come home later and find not a drop of it fell on the farm.

Cheryl Steenerson
Columnist

These last storms brought a lot of wind with them, upturning patio tables, trampolines and any number of kids' pools. It even laid down some corn. But it brought much needed rain along with the wind, so once again, we take the good with the bad. We just have to focus on the silver lining.
We all know this drought is going to have a major effect on our wallets over the next year. Vegetables, fruits, grains, meats and poultry will all go up. Gas prices will also, since we mix ethanol (corn) with the petroleum. So, what's the smart plan?

I say keep planting and preserve all that you can to stock the pantry and freezer. There's a lot of summer left and there's still time to plant many things, in addition to fall crops. Vegetables you can be planting include corn, cucumbers, beans, tomatoes, peppers, eggplant, muskmelon, watermelon, okra, sweet potatoes, beets, carrots, cabbage, parsnips and summer squash.
Feeding your family should involve the whole family. Kids need to know where food comes from and they get a kick out of watching things grow. The higher nutrition values of fresh grown food is just a bonus.
When everyone chips in to help with the growing and the harvest, it leads to all kinds of conversations. You can even talk about the birds and the bees. Growing a garden is one of the few things we have left to help teach patience to children in the instant world we live in today.
Each year, I get questions about how much a bushel is for a variety of vegetables. Followed by the ever popular

"How much does that make?"
So, here you go.
The top two are beans and corn. A bushel of beans weighs about 30 pounds and will give you about 20 quarts. A bushel of corn is 62 ears and will give you about 13 quarts. You can look on the cans of these in the store to give you an idea of how many you need to feed your family until next year's harvest.
A bushel of cucumbers weighs about 55 pounds, onions and potatoes total 50 pounds each, and tomatoes weigh in at 25 pounds. You get about 20 quarts out of a bushel of tomatoes.
Now, if you haven't caught a sunset lately, you really should. These storms have been brewing up some gorgeous ones.
Remember that silver lining and get out there and plant. I'm pretty sure our paychecks are not going to go up as much as the prices in the stores or at the pumps. Just keep in mind the words of a Pulaski County farmer, "Pray for a good harvest, but continue to hoe." Happy growing.

Help and advice available for caregivers

You probably know someone who is a caregiver to a parent, spouse or adult child. Some caregivers are retired and caring for a parent and a spouse.
Many middle-aged adults are finding themselves caring and supporting two generations — their children and their aging parents.
While caregiving can be very rewarding, it often can bring additional emotional, physical and financial stresses for caregivers as they try to balance a career, parenting and elder care.
According to the Family Caregiver Alliance, 520,000 Kentucky informal caregivers provide 570 million hours of care each year. The estimated value of this care is worth more than $5.4 billion.
This support is most often geared toward seniors by middle-aged daughters, who are balancing a full-time job on top of their other daily responsibilities.
Here are a few tips for

handling the physical and emotional stresses related to caregiving:
Recognize how you handle stress and what is stressing you. Put your stressors into perspective and make time for what is really important.
Remember you also need to take care of yourself.
Take physical and emotional breaks from caregiving, such as going for a walk or reading a book.
Ask for help, including professional support.
Remember that the example you set by handling your stress is a model for the rest of your family.
Reducing financial stress requires honesty between all parties involved in the caregiving process (your parents, your children and yourself). You should analyze your financial situation and be honest with your parents about how much financial support you can provide to them now and in the future.
Your parents need to be honest with you about their monthly expenses. Reviewing your parents' expenses may help you find ways where they can cut costs.
If you have minor children at home, it's a good idea to share with the children, according to their level of understanding, that some of your time and money goes to caring for your aging parents. Make sure your children know that you will have time for them.

You may also want to seek support and advice from geriatric care managers, elder care lawyers and financial planners. Get current information instead of relying on what you may have heard several years ago.
The University of Kentucky Extension Service has just started writing a Family Caregiver Health Bulletin. The first issue is August 2012. It will be posted on the Anderson County Extension website or it can be mailed to your home.

Share Christ's message with evil-doers, too

The Colorado shooting spree that took place last week is one of the saddest and most disturbing things I can imagine.
My heart and my prayers go out to the families that lost loved ones and the still injured.

Over the weekend I heard comments from others about what they wish they could do to the perpetrator of this evil act.
However, let me point out one thing. Jesus died for this person just like he died for you and me. I am certainly

I have no knowledge of this man's upbringing or the spiritual forces in his life. I can, however, make a simple assumption that Jesus was

The Anderson News attends school board, library board, fiscal court, health board, work sessions, code enforcement board and other meetings too numerous to count to keep you updated on how city and county public officials are spending your money.

To me, that's not only good news, it's comforting news.

No other media publication focuses its attention on Anderson County like we do. We're the first source for breaking news and we're the only ones who take the time to know and understand the residents that live here, rather than swooping in, getting a quick video clip for the morning or evening news, and then leaving town.

The Anderson News isn't temporary. We'll stay, for better or worse.

As for the worse, it's also not a secret that we write about bad things that happen. But knowledge, even knowledge about the unsavory activities and crime in Anderson County, is

At the end of the day, my job isn't to tell you what's good or bad. It's to inform.

It's to do the best job possible in highlighting and reporting what's going on in Lawrenceburg and Anderson County.

That should be good news to all readers.

More good news, the library board set lower tax rates for the upcoming fiscal year.

Back in late April, it was unclear how the board of trustees would respond to calls for more frugal spending.

Now we're almost into August, and the library board recently passed a 2.3 percent decrease in its tax rate for the 2012-2013 fiscal year, which means a few more dollars in taxpayers' wallets.

Although this doesn't mean the library board should get a carte blanche pass for pacifying taxpayers, it is notable that two of the board members, Bryan Proctor and Amy Kennedy, specifically mentioned the tax rate in being a gesture of goodwill toward the community, those people responsible for helping to keep the library running.

Not that they were the only ones thinking about how the rate will affect tax bills.

The three other board members, even the two board members who voted against the tax rate, spoke about the need to aid taxpayers without taking away from what the library provided for the community.

To use library director Pam Mullins' words, that's a "win-win situation."

Covert camera will monitor trash dumpers, dope growers

Fiscal court, sheriff's office share cost of underground system

By Ben Carlson
News staff

Illegal trash dumpers, pot growers and others who break laws when they think no one is watching will soon have to worry about another way of being caught.

The Anderson County Fiscal Court voted last Tuesday to share the cost of a surveillance camera system with the sheriff's office that will be used to monitor those problems and more.

Det. Bryan Taylor of the sheriff's office presented the idea during the meeting, saying his efforts to use a trail camera designed for hunters were unsuccessful in identifying people dumping trash and debris on Wildcat Road.

"I couldn't make out license plates because a trail camera isn't designed for that," he said.

And unlike trail cameras that have to be affixed to a tree and are highly visible, the camera's hardware and transmission system Taylor suggested is buried beneath the ground and has only a small, flashlight-sized lens that is easily hidden.

He said the camera will transmit images directly to a cell phone, allowing him or whomever is monitoring the camera to instantly see a vehicle filled with debris on Wildcat Road, including the vehicle's make and license plate number.

It also works at night, he said, and has a battery life of six to eight months. If someone attempts to steal it, he said, the camera will photograph the suspect and law enforcement will see who did it.

Taylor said the camera will also be used to monitor marijuana patches, to protect parked highway equipment during road repairs and recycling bins to ensure they aren't being used for household trash.

The idea of catching illegal dumpers on Wildcat Road appealed to magistrates following a massive effort to

Rubber mulch purchased for playground
Magistrates voted unanimously last Tuesday to purchase an estimated $7,000 worth of crumb rubber mulch for the Cole Playground in the county park.

Carolyn Cole, who founded the playground about 14 years ago in memory of her sons, told magistrates the mulch is needed for safety.

"We really need the mulch," she said.

Judge-Executive John Wayne Conway said the fiscal court applied for and lost out on a state grant for crumb rubber mulch, which costs around $700 per ton and provides more cushion than wood chips.

Although Cole requested help in purchasing 6 tons, she said "10 tons will get us where we need to be."

Conway said the fiscal court has about $25,000 in its park maintenance fund, and suggested buying the additional tonnage. He said he would work to secure private donations to help offset that cost.

Magistrates agreed, and voted unanimously to make the purchase. The mulch will be installed by the Band of Brothers, a collection of high school football players who perform community service projects.

Mike Fitzpatrick leads the group and said the players will provide labor to install the mulch, replace old timbers with railroad ties, clean up the rural connector between Tyrone and Harrodsburg Road that was trashed earlier this year with items ranging from household garbage to a hot tub.

Judge-Executive John Wayne Conway said that cleanup effort alone cost at least as much as the camera.

"I think this is a good thing," he said.

Magistrate David Ruggles, who led the Wildcat Road cleanup effort, asked Taylor if it would be better to purchase paint and "spruce it up a little bit."

That work, he said, is planned for July 28-29, and that the playground will be closed for several hours.

Tire amnesty dates set

Those looking to legally dispose of old tires will get their chance Sept. 20-22, it was announced during last Tuesday's fiscal court meeting.

Residents can dispose of an unlimited number of tires during that time at the state highway garage, located on Harrodsburg Road.

The state-sponsored program is for personal-use tires and is not available to businesses.

Tires will be accepted each day from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Business license update

County Clerk Jason Denny updated magistrates on the never-ending effort to track and enforce county business licenses, saying last Tuesday that of roughly 600 licensed business on the books, 259 report having only one employee.

According to statistics compiled through July 20, there are 215 businesses with two to five employees, 89 businesses with six to 25 employees, 14 with 26 to 100 employees, and six with 101 or more.

two of the cameras — one for each end of the Wildcat Road.

"I would like to have two, but I can get by with one," he said.

Fiscal court votes to explore privatizing home incarceration

Jailer Clark objects to 'making money off judicial system'

By Ben Carlson
News staff

The Anderson County jailer is speaking out after the fiscal court shunned her advice and voted last Tuesday night to begin contract discussions with a company that provides home incarceration services.

Lexington-based Corrisoft monitors defendants with ankle bracelets as well as smart phones that track their movements, allow them to receive information about their cases and stay in contact with probation officers.

If a judge allows a defendant to use the phone instead of being incarcerated, that person would be required to pay $10 per day. If indigent, that cost would fall to county taxpayers, but at a savings of $19 per day over what it costs to have the person in jail.

However, Chuck Geveden, a salesman for the company, told magistrates that a fee the county could charge to enroll a defendant in the program would offset the costs for those who cannot pay and even be a money maker.

"Memaw and pepaw will pay that fee to keep a loved one out of jail," he said.

Jailer Joani Clark, who said she was speaking on behalf of District Court Judge Donna Dutton, asked magistrates for more time before making a decision.

"It was presented as a money maker for the county and I am 100 percent against making money off of the criminal justice system," Clark said in a statement following the meeting, adding that it could end up costing the county more in the long run.

Clark said inmates spend twice as much time on home incarceration as they would in jail.

"For instance, if you get 30 days to serve it would be 60 days on home incarceration and, if at any time you do something to revoke your home incarceration such as fail a drug test, it is our judge's policy that you have to serve your entire sentence in jail with no credit for any time served on home incarceration."

Were that to happen, she said, the county would then be on the hook to cover, from the beginning, the cost of program along with the full term in jail.

The fiscal court's vote establishes a committee that includes Clark, judges and other county officials and will meet to establish guidelines, costs and how the program will be used across the 53rd Judicial District, which includes Anderson, Spencer and Shelby counties. Spencer has already voted to use the program, and Shelby is expected to consider it next month.

County Attorney Bobbi Jo Lewis said she supports the program. She said the fiscal court's vote does not obligate it to use it, and that it will only pay for the service if it's utilized.

"It's another tool in a prosecutor's tool belt," Lewis said, who added she envisions being able to use it, with a judge's approval, in child support cases.

Circuit Court Judge Charles Hickman also spoke in favor of the program during last Tuesday's meeting.

Trial date set for murder suspect

From staff reports

A trial date for the man charged with murdering his wife in March has been set for Feb. 25, 2013.

Timothy Lee Branson, 48, was arrested earlier this year for allegedly shooting Modena Branson during a domestic dispute at the couple's home on Ballard Road. Following the shooting, police say Branson shot himself in the head but survived.

His trial date was set Tuesday morning when he appeared in Anderson Circuit Court.

About a dozen of Modena Branson's family sat silently as Branson stood in front of the judge for what proved to be a brief appearance.

On the day of the March 5 shooting, Modena Branson's daughter, Patricia Darnell, told police that she took her home and she and her children waited in their vehicle while her mother went inside, according to an affidavit.

Darnell said her mother phoned her from inside the residence and that she overheard an argument inside, followed by two or three "loud pops."

Darnell and her 14-year-old son ran to the back door and were confronted by Timothy Branson who was pointing a gun in their direction, according to the affidavit.

Darnell said he told them they needed to leave.

When Darnell asked where her mother was, Timothy Branson pointed at the floor in the living room. She said she could see her mother on the floor, and that Branson again pointed the gun at them and said

Cops & Rodders raises more than $4,000 for two good causes

From staff reports

Hundreds of people flocked to downtown Main Street last Saturday for the first Cops & Rodders car show, raising more than $4,000 for two good causes — Shop with A Cop and the Kentucky Sheriff's Boys and Girls Ranch.

Sheriff Troy Young said he had no idea what kind of response the event would get, and said he received many compliments on the show. He already has started on suggestions for what the sheriff's office will do next year if they host the event again, including possibly adding a motorcycle division.

"No matter if it's an event we did once or for 20 years, we take notes," he said.

The car show featured 250-350 classic cars, hot rods and law enforcement vehicles, as well as music, food and raffle prizes.

Congressman Ben Chandler, in the absence of Gov. Steve Beshear, announced the winners of the various categories, including overall best of show, from a bucket truck above the car show crowd.

The best of show winner was Harold Darnaby with his '55 Chevy pick-up truck.

The Jessamine County Coroner's Office won best specialty vehicle in the law enforcement division.

The University of Kentucky police department won best patrol vehicle.

Century Bank: Where innovation and tradition meet

Customers can still walk into either of the Century Bank branches in Lawrenceburg and conduct business the old fashioned way — in person. But they don't have to.

Thanks to the bank's ever-increasing efforts to provide modern-day conveniences, customers can access nearly every service it provides whenever, and from wherever, they choose.

"Banking has evolved to become increasingly mobile due to everyone's hectic schedules and other tasks that take up our time," said Kathy White, the bank's vice president. "New technology has extended banking hours to be 24/7, not just when the front doors and drive-thru windows are open.

"Century Bank strives to meet the expectations of our community to make everyday banking as convenient as possible."

And those possibilities are growing. Online banking from a home computer was considered cutting-edge just a few short years ago. But with smart phones and other gadgets flooding the technology market, Century Bank officials know they must keep pace.

"Technology will continue to dictate the products and services we offer for the foreseeable future," said Darin Young, the bank's executive vice president. "Our customers and the bank will benefit from this because going forward, consumers will continue to have online or mobile access to their finances and loans."

White agreed, saying that while Century Bank isn't as large as some regional or national banks, that doesn't mean it isn't focused on keeping pace.

"Our Board of Directors and staff are committed to providing the services that larger banks do but right here in Lawrenceburg," White said.

Bank employee Tamara Smith, left, welcomes Pam Rice, executive director of the Anderson County Chamber of Commerce, and John Rennels, a member of the chamber's board of directors, to the bank's free Snow Cone Day event.

"It is always forethought on our minds to be able to offer our customers cutting edge technology like mobile banking and online loan resources to manage their financials and take them into the next generation of banking."

But that doesn't mean those who prefer a more traditional approach to banking aren't important, too.

"Century Bank continues to look at new ways to modernize our services while always keeping sight that we are the local bank of our community," Young said.

"We take great pride in being a locally owned and operated institution that's involved and active in the development of our town.

"We keep up with the latest industry trends and look for improved ways for both our personal and business clients to utilize their hometown bank, regardless of the time or the place."

Luncheon successful

A successful luncheon was held July 10 featuring guest speakers Janie Fields and Charlotte Wong who spoke on behalf of Kentucky Organ Donor Affiliates.

State Rep. Kim King, right, discusses organ donations with Janie Fields, an organ donor who discussed the process during a recent chamber luncheon.

Wong serves as the agency's educational coordinator.

Fields informed the group of her personal experience with organ donation after losing her daughter.

Both speakers showed their expertise and sincere support of organ donation explained the process for those who choose to donate organs.

Chamber members also had the opportunity to speak with state senate candidate Frank Haynes, congressional candidate Andy Barr and incumbent state Rep. Kim King. They gave members the opportunity to meet and ask questions about why they stand on a variety of issues.

The chamber welcomes and encourages candidates for public office to attend luncheons and After Hours events, chamber officials said.

"We will not use this time as an open platform to speak as we feel that should be done at a debate, but we encourage members to know their candidates," said Pam Rice, the chamber's executive director.

Virginia Ritter was honored on her 81st birthday with a get-together at the Fox Creek RECC building.

Mrs. Ritter is a very special person to many people. Besides raising five children of her own and helping others all her life, she raised a garden until this year. She canned and froze her own vegetables and made jam, preserves and pickles.

Mrs. Ritter sometimes walks with a cane now; however, it may be used for a past time more often. She's already killed a ground hog and two snakes and caught a large turtle with that cane this summer.

(Excerpt from Birdie Notes, written by Kathleen Cooper)

"Seems there was a woman who sighted a fawn alongside a road. She felt the fawn was in danger so she "rescued" it. Never mind that mama deer was probably several feet away and merely waiting for her "child" to catch up with her.

"This woman, stating she did not know it was against the law for her to have the fawn, took the baby home with her. Doesn't sound too bad, does it?"

"She fed it, groomed it, pampered it and pierced its ears. That's right, she pierced its little ears and put earrings in them!

"Now, this woman may have been unaware of the illegality of her having a fawn in her possession without permission of the game warden BUT, surely she didn't think it was in the fawn's best interest to pierce those ears?"

"... The game wardens have rescued the fawn and removed the earrings. It will be raised until it can fend for itself and then released. The holes will grow over and, if deer tell stories, can you imagine the tale this particular deer can relate to his grandchildren, years down the road?"

"How he can exhibit those healed over scars and tell of the stupidity of humans?"

Work began on the new district court offices where the old jail used to be behind the courthouse.

Alton Baptist welcomes new worship leader

Kris Grimes has accepted the position of worship leader, Alton Baptist Church announced.

Grimes has extensive experience in Christian ministry and church work, the announcement said.

He previously served Alton as minister of youth, a role he began while still a student at Centre College in Danville and in which he continued for five years.

HIDING BEHIND LOVE

I was in the office the other day and heard a voice on the television talking about how people ought to attend where he preached. I had a problem with him talking about attending where he preached because his message left a little to be desired. His message was on love and how that love covered everything. The question that needs to be asked, Whose love are we talking about, God's or man's? From his message it was clear that he was talking about his view of love, not God's

In order to have a proper understanding of love, we must be willing to OBEY God's every command. Jesus said it this way: "As the Father loved Me, I also have loved you; abide in My love. If you keep My commandments, you will abide in My love, just as I have kept My Father's commandments and abide in His love" (John 15:9-10). From this passage we can see that love is more involved than saying "I love." True love can be found only in abiding in the commandments (love) of God. If God says it, that settles it, discussion over.

We will never have the proper love for GOD or our fellowman until we learn to love as Jesus loves. "This is My commandment, that you love one another as I have loved you" (John 15:12). Our love must be like the love of Jesus as He served and sacrificed. Love is an action term, that denotes observing and doing ALL that God has commanded.
